THE LONDON SCANDALS DUPLICATED.

A Shocking Story from Gotham—An Ohio Man Carries Out His Threat—The Ralls County Fiend Captured—Other Criminal News from Various Points.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—Frank Potter of 484 Humboldt street, Brooklyn, and Miss Emma Fuller, of 90 South First street, have been indicted by the grand jury charged with abducting Bertha Saul, 14 years of age, of 113 Skillman avenue.

Bertha's story is in many respects similar to the London scandals. She is a very pretty girl and lives with her parents. On Aug. 23 last, she says she met Potter who is a block maker doing business on that street, and he spoke to her pleasantly, winning her confidence. A week later she met him again and he asked her to meet him that night at Mrs. Fuller's residence. She went there and Mrs. Fuller, she says, left the room as Potter came and her ruin was then accomplished. From there Potter took her to a disreputable house at Grand and Mott streets, New York. Some of the females of this place took compassion on the little girl, and called the attention of the police to her case. She was arrested and arraigned before Justice Gorham, who gave her in charge of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. They notified Superintendent Wilkins of the Brooklyn society, who, with the aid of Officers McComb and Resdick, have been investigating the matter. It is stated that they will make some startling revelations when the case comes up for trial, but at present they are very reticent. Potter was arrested on Sept. 4, and held by Justice Walsh to await the action of the grand jury. He is out on bail, but will be arraigned as soon as Miss Potter is apprehended. Bertha is said to have borne an excellent reputation up to the time of her acquaintance with Potter. Her family knew she was acquainted with him and, not liking him, did all in their power to break it up. When she told him her family were opposed to their meeting he told her he would hire a furnished room for her so that she need not fear nor hear the reproaches of her family. Potter is 24 years of age and anything but good looking.

A Whisky Dealer's Troubles.

LEBANON, Mo., Oct. 3.—On the 23rd of last month A. P. McMillan, of this city, bought $2.700 worth of liquors from Lynch & Co., St. Louis, for the purpose of engaging in the wholesale liquor business in this city. McMillan represented himself to be worth $50,000, and the goods were shipped without delay, McMillan borrowing money from the bank to pay the freight charges. Mr. Lynch, sr., a member of the firm, arrived in this city to-day and seized the goods, which will be shipped back to St. Louis. As soon as the goods were shipped to this place they were stored away in a building owned by McMillan. McMillan then got on a spree and locked himself up with the whiskey where he remained for several days, all efforts to get him out being fruitless. The circumstances surrounding the case are remarkable and further developments in the case are looked for. McMillan is a man highly respected and his actions in the case cannot be accounted for by his friends.

A Big Trial.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Oct. 3.—After exhausting the third venire of sixty men the attorneys in the case of the state vs. Ynyacia Cortez, charged with the murder of Sid Staniforth, succeeded in selecting a jury to try the case on the law and the testimony. The defence has cropped out on certain remarks from the attorneys, will be that Staniforth committed suicide. At noon the prosecution opened with expert testimony, when Dr. Chew was placed upon the stand and, aided by a human skeleton, explained to the jury the nature of the wounds which produced Staniforth's death. He holds that deceased did not commit suicide, but was murdered. Up to the hour of adjourning at 6 p. m., five physicians had testified for the prosecution and eight for the defence. They stand four to one against the theory of suicide. Dr. Herff alone gave it as his opinion that the deceased could have fired both shots in the head. The case is attracting a great deal of attention.

The marshal has notified the Ralls county authorities.

A Would-Be Assassin Nearly Killed.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 3.—A Piedmont, Mo., special to the Post-Dispatch says: Wm. H. McCown, a lawyer of this place, and T. E. Flynn, a railroad operator at Williamsburg, Mo., had a quarrel on an incoming train this morning. McCown was slightly intoxicated, and boasting he would kill Flynn, went home and got his double barrelled shot gun. He then went to a barber shop where Flynn was being shaved and fired one barrel through the window at him. The powder burnt Flynn's face. The latter jumped from his chair and drawing his revolver, fired three times at McCown. He then grabbed the latter's gun and beat him over the head, fracturing his skull. McCown cannot recover.

A Drunken Man's Murder.

CIRCLEVILLE, O., Oct. 3.—Wm. Bookwalter, while drunk yesterday, took a position on the turnpike near town and said he was going to kill the first negro that passed. Nobody paid any attention to him, but when Samuel Tibbs, a colored boy 20 years old, came along, driving some cattle, in company with white men, Bookwalter renewed the threat to Tibbs, who laughingly said he did not believe him, and rode on. Bookwalter fired and struck Tibbs in the back, fatally wounding him. Bookwalter was arrested.

When they emerged from the fray the former had a slight cut and the latter was disembowled and will die.

Before Marcum arose from bed his father-in-law went into the room and hacked his head to pieces with an axe.

SPIRITUALISM IN RUSSIA

Making More Scientific than Popular Progress.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—The eccentric movement termed Spiritualism, so widely spread in Europe and America, has also visited Russia and penetrated into even the most remote of her provinces. The Colossus has passed through all the phases of table-turning, rappings, spirit materialization and similar marvels, and has had by no means a scant harvest of writing, rapping, curing and prophesying "mediums." The Russian "mediums," however, have never attained the world wide reputation of the Homes, Davenports, Katie Kings and tutti quanti. They have been generally of a familiar domestic description, and their doings and sayings, however remarkable, have been mostly confined to the narrow circle of home and friends. But strange to say, it is in this country that Spirtualism, as the development of the science of psychology, has found its most earnest interpreters, and it is in St. Petersburg and Moscow that these curious manifestations have attracted and interested such men as Professor Doutlereff, of European celebrity, and Profesor Wagner, both attached to the Petersburg university; the Russian savant, Mr. Alexander Axakoff, Professor Tourkevitch, Dr. Basil Mihailoff and many more distinguished men of science and letters, such as Dastoensky, Solovieff and Dimitri Tserteleff. Having found hospitality in such an exalted circle, spiritualism ceased to be an amusement for drawing room idlers and became a problem with pretensions to a scientific solution. The public was lost in amazement at first to behold three scientific stars of capital magnitude pay the most concentrated and serious attention to this question in its modern form, to the moving and rapping of tables, the trances of somnambulists and the pranks and antics of so-called "mediums," which the conclave of experimenters had over from England, Germany and even America regardless of expense. Both Mr. Boutlereff and Mr. Wagner had previously been declared enemies of this movement and the most inveterate materialists withal, so that at first they were supposed by their colleagues at the university and by the students to have gone out of their minds.

It may be said here that such a collection of cheveliers d'industrie and bold adventuresses as those "mediums" proved to be was rarely met with anywhere out of a fair. The scientific investigators were at first disconcerted at the evident deception played upon them, but nevertheless persevered and carried on a series of the most minutely and carefully controlled observations upon and investigations into the more genuine of those phenomenal organizations called "mediums," and finally came to the positive conclusion that there was something in it after all. They then proceeded with marvelous patience to ferret out the small grains of truth in the midst of deception, bad faith and greed for money. The results of this most tedious task, which lasted for years, were as follow: Professor Boutlereff came to the conclusion that the manifestations called spiritual are founded upon a series of curious facts having their source in some force hitherto unknown, but by no means unknowable. He admits, together with the English specialist in chemistry, Mr. Crookes, the existence of a more subtle and refined state of matter than those hitherto known, which can become perceptible only in a certain condition of the body, a condition usually produced by magnetism, and more easily attained by so-called "mediums," i. e., organizations more than ordinarily susceptible and nervous. Professor Boutlereff has given a great deal of time and care to the research of this mysterious agent, and his experiments have confirmed the discovery of Mr. Crookes.

The Russian spiritualists, who have few adherents among their compatriots, and have had to put up with a great deal of annoyance on the part of the public as well as on that of the government, do not seek to popularize their ideas as yet, but rather to consolidate them and gather them into a scientific formula. They consequently seek to attract into their circle men of science, doctors, materialists; in short, persons deprived of romantic sentimentality and religious enthusiasm, so as fairly to place the question upon a new ground, not letting it degenerate into sectarianism, giving no food whatever to the imagination, and so rendering it interesting to positive and serious minds.

Had this programme been perseveringly adhered to the question might have made progress; but both Professors Boutlereff and Wagner adopted (although unwillingly at first) the hypothesis that these manifestations must be produced by the spirits of former inhabitants of this planet, and this point of view having been prematurely given to the world in a series of articles principally due to the pen of Professor Wagner, and published in one of the best periodicals, threw great discredit on the cause at the very outset, and made people open their eyes in astonishment at the credulity of the professors. Perceiving their imprudence and the blows this hypothesis was going to strike at the whole structure, Messrs. Boutiereff and Wagner turned abruptly on another track, and in subsequent articles endeavored to keep on strictly objective ground concerning the cause of the manifestations. Russia now possesses a considerable literature on the subject which totally differs from productions of the same kind abroad, inasmuch as these articles are stamped with a spirit of genuine scientific research and present the subject in quite a new light.

The government does all in its power to discourage the movement, as it is supposed to be closely allied to socialism. Any one having read the books of Andrew Jackson Davis will easily understand that such reading would never do tor the Russian people at present, and of course all such works are strictly forbidden and are only read by a few persons. Spiritual manifestations are regarded not only by the clergy but even by the holy synod itself as having their origin in the source of all evil. Newspapers most unwillingly publish articles in favor of the question, though they eagerly accept any thing against it. The censor is extremely severe, and it is in vain that Mr. Axakoff, who is a man of ample means, ready to sacrifice any sum, has endeavored to start some organ through which to acquaint persons interested therein with the results of the experiments made. Thus it will be seen that Messes. Boutlereff, Wagner and Axakoff and their friends have to struggle against no ordinary difficulties. But they are men of no common energy and character, and moreover, deeply convinced of the truth of the greater part of the doctrines taught by spiritualists, and though they move but slowly they have been able to draw into their circle persons of talent and distinction who, if not yet all fully convinced, are greatly interested in the experiments.

Among the most cultivated members of the Russian clergy one sometimes meets with persons interested in spiritualism. They talk of it timidly and are visibly afraid of compromising themselves, but it is evident that the subject possesses great attraction for them. I lately spoke with a very respectable and erudite orthodox priest and asked him to give me his opinion concerning the manifestations. He told me that he fully believed in them, and could preceive nothing in these facts contrary to the teachings of the church. Among the common people in Russia the belief in ghosts, spirits and all kinds of fantastic beings is almost universal, there not being perhaps in the world a more superstitious people. But all attempts to communicate with the spirits of the dead inspire them with terror, and they consider persons who do so as magicians or sorcerers. As to the middle classes, there are among them a good many believers in spiritualism who even sometimes organize circles, but this is usually done in an off-and-on amateur sort of way, showing little genuine interest in the subject.

DIVIDING THE SPOILS.

ST. LOUIS TO GET THE LION'S SHARE.

The Country Politicians Have to Take a Back Seat—Who Are Competitors for the Places—The Senators' Favorites—Senator Cockrell's Opinions—Notes.

[Special Telegram to the Star.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 3.—Senator Cockrell and Congressmen O'Neill, Hutton and Dawson have the whole responsibility of Missouri affairs to carry now, being the only representatives of the state left in Washington. Senator Vest, Congressmen Clardy, Bland, Dockery, with Commissioner Colman and Colonel Morrow of the senate force all left yesterday by the fast afternoon train for St. Louis, where they will arrive this evening. Senator Vest's departure for St. Louis was quite unexpected as he had intended going to New York and meant to return to Washington and stay until there was action on the St. Louis offices but he was called west by a telegram received yesterday informing him of a law case to come up at Kansas City on Monday which will require his personal attention. He said just before leaving he had hoped they could get on with the case without his attention, but the telegram advised him he would be wanted, so he had to leave his Washington business in the hands of Senator Cockrell. It is the general belief now that while there has been no formal conference between the senators and congressmen interested in the eastern district appointments in relation to a division of the patronage, there has been more or less interchange of views on the subject during this week. Every congressman concerned in these offices has been in the city with the exception of Mr. Hale, although Mr. Hatch left Monday before Senator Cockrell and Messrs. Bland and Dawson arrived. Still there has been an opportunity for a full exchange of views, and it appears that a reasonably definite understanding was reached without a regular caucus for the purpose. It may be said decidedly and on very excellent authority the result of the conferring in this indirect way is that the country members accept the conclusion that the collector of internal revenue will be a St. Louis man. That much is finally determined, although not clinched by any vote of the caucus. The country members have simply been made to recognize that it is the opinion of Secretary Manning and President Cleveland that the business of the revenue office is of such a nature that they think it best to select a collector from the city. As soon as it was understood that the sentiment of the administration was so pronounced in this respect that it would require an effort to overcome it the congressmen who were backing the country candidates realized it would be best to submit gracefully. They are making all their calculations for the marshalship and district attorney, although it must not be supposed this division of the spoils has been formally assented to or that there is any agreement binding the city congressmen to hold their hands off these offices. O'Neill has not by any means thrown up Harrigan, and no one professes to know what candidate Glover will press for either office. At the same time the impression does exist that both senators incline favorably to the allotment of the marshal and district attorney to the country. There is no suggestion made respecting the candidate they will support, but it is the opinion of the country members that it is not a matter of immediate importance for the reason that a feeling exists that no change will be made in either of the places just now. If the appointments are urged it is thought not at all unlikely that Burks and Edwards may find other residents of the country contesting with them. While Bashaw, Peers and Morrow, are the only country candidates now for district attorney, they may have to confront a large list of rural competitors before the selection is finally made.

"I see there is a persistent misstatement regarding Senator Cockrell's position in the matter of the St. Louis postmastership," said one of the Missouri congressmen who left for home this afternoon, just before he boarded the train. "I wish you would give a correct account of the attitude of Cockrell. He has not changed his position since he came to Washington, and I know he has told every one since he has been here just as he did in St. Louis, that he will not indorse or recommend any of the candidates for postmaster. If his advice is sought by General Vilas or the president, he says he will make a frank and fair statement of all he knows of the candidates and tell just what he thinks of them."

"When may the appointment be made?" the congressman was then asked, but he responded by saying that he didn't know and didn't believe that any one knew. "You can tell them this though," he continued, "that Senator Cockrell has asked for speedy action in the matter of all St. Louis offices. There is an evident endeavor to create the impression that he is holding back and preventing action, but that is all wrong. He has made a point of asking for action and will do all he can to get it. I think, however, that he believes there will be nothing done immediately in the case of the marshal and district attorney.

Senator Cockrell says that he fully expects action on the St. Louis postmastership before the end of next week. He has urged the postmaster-general to give it immediate attention, and thinks it will be disposed of in a few days.

"Macbeth in French."

The French adaptation in verse of "Macbeth," by M. Jules Lacroix, was revived at the Odeon last night. An account of the preceding representation of this piece in October last has already appeared in your columns, and the only novelty of the cast consisted in the debut of Mlle. Roussell as Lady Macbeth. The last interpreter of this part at the Odeon. Mme. Tesiadier chiefly devoted herself to bringing out into bold relief the more terrible side of Lady Macbeth's character. The new debutante in the role, on the contrary, took special pains to portray the womanly tact and power of fascination which enabled her to obtain a mastery over her weak and irresolute husband. Mlle. Roussell is of course, no novice in tragedy, and her previous training, which has been marked by histrionic triumphs on other boards, justified the expectation of those who were sanguine as to her success in the difficult part intrusted to her last night. Her declamation of M. Jules Lacroix's lines was warmly appreciated by the large audiences, and her powerful voice rang out in the more dramatic scenes with excellent effect. She sustained her part throughout with ability, rivaling her predecessor in the delineation of the ferocity of the pitiless murderess, and gaining enthusiactic applause by her rendering of the sleep walking scene. M. Paul Mounet, who played Macbeth, was not quite so successful, and his acting was on more than one occasion received with coldness by the audience. He, however, scored a success in the banquet scene. M. Rebel as Macduff and Mlle. Hadamard as Malcom were also warmly applauded, especially the latter, who completely captivated the house by her manner of rendering the spirited speeches of the pathetic scene with Macduff in the fourth act.

A FORGER'S CAREER.

The Whereabouts of a Millionaire Rascal—How He Has Succeeded in His Present Place of Residence.

[Buenos Ayres Correspondence Boston Herald.]

D. Warren Lowe, alias Winslow, the Boston forger, came here from England about nine years ago, and, after engaging in various small enterprises became connected with the English newspaper as a reporter and advertising solicitor. His well known energy and ability soon began to tell, and he secured control of the Herald, which was then a weekly. It was soon published twice a week, and during the last three years it has been a daily, with a large subscription list and good advertising patronage. Some Irishmen by the name of Munhall conducted another English daily, but run it on the London plan—nine-tenths editorial and one-tenth news—while Winslow's paper is more newsy, bright, and sensational. He also has a job office which enjoys a large patronage and is a lucrative source of revenue. He owns a fine business block and a residence, and is making money out of his paper and printing establishment, but has neglected it of late to engage in some speculative enterprise of magnificent dimensions, but doubtful prospect. When he came to Buenos Ayres he was cordially received by the American colony and citizens generally, and soon succeeded in acquiring the confidence and respect of the people. His manners were agreeable, and his energy and ability gave him a leading position. He said very little about himself, and no one cared to inquire into his antecedents or impeach his reputation.

One day an officer from the man-of-war Nipsic, which was lying in the harbor, met Mr. D. Warren Lowe at a dinner party, and recognized in him Winslow, the Boston forger and fugitive, whom he had known in the naval service, when Winslow was a chaplain. The latter did not deny his identity, but begged the officer not to "give him away," as he was endeavoring to live an honorable life and deserve the respect of his acquaintances. The secret leaked out, however, and Winslow was cut by some of his former friends; but his frankness and apparent determination to behave properly soon restored him to their confidence. He has never publicly acknowledged his past record, and the newspapers of Buenos Ayres have generally excluded all reference to it from their columns, although he has engaged in some bitter controversies with them. Some years ago a Boston gentleman was here on a visit, who had known Winslow well in the states, and the two men met as old friends. But the stranger kept calling him Winslow in public and in private, much to the annoyance of the exile. Finally he could endure it no longer, and requested his friend to refer to him thereafter as Mr. Lowe. "My name was Winslow once, but it is Lowe now," he said, "and always will be." There is no extradition treaty between the United States and Argentine, and "Mr. Lowe" is safe here, but is very careful about his movements, and can not be persuaded, under any circumstances, to go on board a United States man-of-war, or any other vessel carying the stars and stripes. Several times detectives have been here planning for his capture, but he has been smart enough to escape their clutches.

Only once has he been out of the country, and that was when he went to Europe to get married. This marriage cost him his social position, and is the only act he has committed during his residence in Argentine that is discreditable to him. One day his paper contained a notice of the death of his "beloved wife" in the United States, and he at once put on widower's weeds, refusing social invitations, and recognizing every rule of social etiquet. He shed tears freely when his bereavement was alluded to, and described the womanly virtues and the wifely devotion of the departed in the most affectionate manner. After the usual period of mourning was over Mr. Lowe disappeared from the usual haunts for three months, and when he returned had a lady with him, who was introduced as his bride, and quite cordially received by his friends in Buenos Ayres. She appeared to be a woman of no social accomplishments, but of modest demeanor, and while in no way his equal, has been a true wife and mother. When it was subsequently learned that his first wife was still living and undivorced, Mr. Lowe was no longer socially recognized in Buenos Ayres, but the second Mrs. Lowe is considered guiltless, as she is understood to have been convinced, and still believes, that he was a genuine widower. Nothing will shake her confidence in him, and the neighbors cannot but admire her faith and devotion.

A BIG HAUL.

A Colored Man Steals a Valuable Set of Diamonds and $400 in Money.

This morning Mr. D. B. Briggs, who was engaged in moving his household effects from Forest and Independence avenues to 613 Forest avenue, hired a colored man to do work about the building into which he was moving. The colored man had access to the rooms and when he left it was discovered that he had stolen a $400 set of diamonds, considerable other jewelry and $400 in money. The thief is five feet ten inches in height, 25 years old, yellow complexioned and wore a blue sack coat, dark pants and Derby hat. The police are looking for him.

The Girl Who'd Ask Charley.

[Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.]

"Oh, Lucy, what do you think of the yacht race?"

"Indeed I don't know much about it; how was it?"

"Oh, don't you! Charley was up as usual last night, you know, and he told me all about it—you know Charley takes a great interest in these things."

"Yes, tell me about it."

"Well, when the Puritan started she stood on her starboard tack and broke."

"No. What's a starboard tack?"

"I don't know. But pretty soon the Genesta luffed her spinnaker boom and passed a red buoy on the port side."

"A red boy? An Indian, was it?" interrupted Lucy.

"I don't know. I'll ask Charley. And then they both stood on the starboard tack awhile till the Puritan's mainsail got mixed with the stern sheets—"

"What are the stern sheets?"

"I don't know. I'll ask Charley—and the Genesta stood on some more tacks and the Puritan held her own—"

"Held her own what?"

"I don't know. I'll ask Charley—and then the Puritan held her own until the Genesta was a mile to leeward—"

"The leeward; what's that?"

"I don't know. I'll ask Charley—and by that time they both broke tacks with each other, and—"

"Broke tacks. That was bad."

"Yes, very bad, and then they rounded some more bouys, and the Puritan went in corsets, and—"

"What! Went in corsets?" repeated Lucy, shocked.

"No, not corsets; went in stays, is what Charley said, but it's the same thing; and then the Puritan came out ahead, and the yachts—"

"The yachts? What are yachts, my dear?"

"Oh, I don't know; I'll ask Charley, and—"

And we had to get off the car.

A TALK WITH BEECHER

THE POSITION OF THE MUGWUMP.

The Veteran Preacher Explains the Political Questions of the Hour—High License and Prohibition—The President's Course Heartily Endorsed in New York.

[Special Telegram to The Star.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—The chilly air of Peekskill and the disappearance of the hay fever has induced the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher to return to his old home in this city. The great divine was hard at work when the reporter called on him this morning. When asked what he thought of the political situation he said:

"I am not meddling with politics except in thought. Civil service reform and the silver questions are the only two live questions on the surface. The Mormon question is yet to be dealt with as have also the Chinese and Indian questions. To put it in the abstract we have yet to face the question, 'What shall we do for the weak and ignorant?' All industrial and commercial questions have got to settle themselves by their mutual interests. The passage of laws concerning them is as much a hindrance as it is a help. I think the question of free trade is rapidly assuming a form which will settle it. This will be brought about by the overruling laws of commerce. They have got to knock down a high tariff; they have got to take off a burdensome tariff from raw materials. The moment you do that other interests will complain and the tariff will then have to be adjusted to suit all interests fairly. There will be no settled peace until we approach the boundaries of free trade or a tariff for revenue without regard to protection. With our soil, with our sun, with our schools and our people if we cannot stand on our own feet and take care of ourselves it is time we should go under."

"It has been said that you strongly advocated the insertion of a high license plank in the Republican platform. Are you disappointed in the action of the party in ignoring the question entirely?"

"As between high license and prohibition; as one a possibility and the other an impossibility, I am in favor of high license and local option. The managers of the Republican party did what they thought best. They neglected that question, but that is neither here nor there. I did not volunteer it, although I believe in it."

"What do you estimate the strength of the Prohibitionists at in New York state?"

"I am not in a position to form a judgment. My impression is that so far as the movement exists, it represents one-third from the Democratic party, and two-thirds from the Republican party. It will draw in that ratio from the regular parties."

"What is the actual position of the Independents in this campaign."

"The Independents are not so much interested in either party. They are interested in both parties insomuch as they represent the reforming element. I believe that there is a very large section in the Democratic party which believes in an honest civil service reform, represented by President Cleveland; perhaps a rather large proportion of the Republicans also believe in it. If these can work together it will be for the best interests of the country and for the purification of both parties. To men of my class it is the moral element in politics that is the most profoundly interesting."

"Does not the Republican party by its platform condemn President Cleveland and his policy?"

"I utterly dissent from that platform. The platform does not mean anything. It is making but a net to catch fish with, and, therefore, in judging a platform, I judge it not so rigidly. On the other hand the Democratic platform has more faults and not so many excellencies."

"Is not President Cleveland's course but a strict adherence to his party's platform?"

"President Cleveland has moved solely on the political lines marked out in his original letter. I think his judgment is very sound, and I regard his execution as very sagacious and courageous; and by the time he shall have been four years administering the government, he will have achieved a reputation that will rank him second to no president we ever had, not excepting Lincoln."

CRIPPLED FOR LIFE.

A Stock Dealer's Sad Misfortune—A Little Girl Fatally Hurt by a Pet Bear—Other Casualties.

[Special Telegram to The Star.]

MOBERLY, Mo., Oct. 3.—A stock man from St. Joe, by the name of Henry Hammond, while crossing the track in front of a switch engine at the depot this morning, was knocked down and run over. The engine and tender passed over both his legs, reducing them to a mass of pulp, rendering the amputation of both limbs necessary. He will recover, but will be a helpless cripple for life. No blame attaches to the engineer of the switch engine, as the man himself was clearly in fault.

Fatal Result of Teasing a Bear.

[Special Telegram to The Star.]

SHERMAN, Tex., Oct. 3.—This evening a little girl named Mary Meisner teased a performing bear chained up in a back yard into a rage. He finally broke his fastenings and attacked the child. Her screams brought an old colored man to her rescue, and he beat the bear off with an iron bar. The animal fled into the street creating consternation. About fifty men, armed with shot-guns, pursued and finally slew the bear. The child is not expected to live, being horribly mangled about the back, neck and shoulders.

A CATTLE CONFERENCE.

Texans Express Some Strong Opinions About the State of their Business and its Needs.

[Special Telegram to The Star.]

DALLAS, Tex., Oct. 3.—A large number of prominent cattlemen are in the city with the object of conferring with Colonel J. N. Simpson, president of the Texas Cattlemen's association, respecting the policy of calling a cattlemen's convention at an early day, in favor of which movement there is a complete unanimity. Among the number are Messrs. Chas. Goodnight, of Polandora Canyon; O. H. Nelson, of the Panhandle; W. C. Coogle, of Clarendon; O. P. Woods, of Harrold; A. C. Pierce, of Big Springs; W. F. Cobb, of Henrietta, and Colonel Veal, of Breckenridge. An informal meeting was held last evening at the exchange at which an interchange of views was had, all favoring immediate action in favor of a convention. Mr. Johns. a heavily interested stockman of Kansas City and Dallas, in an interview with a reporter, contended that so long as Texas encounters only fair competition against Kansas, Nebraska, the Indian and other territories in the markets of Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, its stock growers will be satisfied; but when the enforcement of questionable quarantine regulations, the dissemination of ranting anti-trail men and the almost malicious and senseless attacks of certain eastern newspapers conjoin to bring about a depreciation in values and the apprehension caused that Texas stock is fevered and unfit for consumption, he thought it high time that the cattle dealers of Texas should unite and let their unison be strong, earnest, determined and free from sectional jealousy. There was a time," he continued, "when stock associations were organized simply for the round-up and detective purposes with a supper and a ball thrown in; but now with Texas quarantined and boxed up with her yearlings realizing from $2 to $5 per head less than their proper value; with the question of an outlet for young stock still unsettled, the associations have graver work to perform and more imperative duties to attend to. If necessary, and it had almost reached that point, the stockman must for a time, perforce for a time he thought, become a lobbyist and a legislator, to the end that his industry may be protected against the jealous and irrational acts of northern ranchers. The stockmen are unanimous on the policy of sending live, active delegates to the Cattle and Horse Growers' Association meeting in St. Louis in November. All say a state convention should be called for the election of the delegates as well as to thoroughly discuss the question at issue and harmonize upon a line of policy to be pursued as a unit by the delegation. President Simpson is daily in receipt of communications from cattle men in harmony with the views above expressed, and every indication seems to point to his call for a convention at an early date.

REINSTATED.

Secretary Whitney Causes Seven Veterans to Get their Old Places in the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—A number of discharges were made in the Brooklyn navy yard last spring owing to the smallness of the appropriation available. Among those first discharged were seven veterans. The matter was at once taken up by the Veterans' Rights union and efforts made to have the men reinstated in their positions. Commissioner Chandler was appointed by the committee and they were referred to the foremen but no satisfaction could be obtained.

The committee on the 16th of last July, wrote a letter to Secretary Whitney, in which they asked that due attention be given laws concerning the veterans either in the original appointment to the positions or to the preference to which they are entitled when a reduction in force is necessary. "In this connection we would state that too frequently, in the reduction of a force, a soldier or sailor has been first, not last, to go. We have been told when we have sought to obtain for these men generally occupying positions as mechanics or laborers, their rights under law, that the soldier and sailor business was played out, or have been advised to bring some ward politicians to plead for the men. The main trouble in the Brooklyn navy yard, we find, is among the foremen, who are more anxious to retain their influence in politics than they are to do justice to the veterans. Can we not ask that you will issue an order to each and every branch of the navy department, covering the preference which has been promised by law since 1865, and never even partially enforced until this organization has become a necessity?"

To the above appeal the following letter was received a short time ago:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 22, 1885.

Gentlemen—Your letter of recent date requesting that due attention be given the claims of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors for employment and retention in the navy department and yards under its control has been received. In reply I have to say that it would give me pleasure at all times to give preference to those honorably discharged from the military and naval seevice of the United States, either for appointments or retention in office, as the case may be, if equally competent and deserving. The efforts of the Grand Army of the Republic to maintain in this way a premium on patriotism displayed by these honorably discharged soldiers and sailors are commendable and shall have my co-operation. You may rest assured the fact that a man is an honorably discharged soldier will not militate against his getting employment in any of the establishments under the control of the navy department, but, on the contrary, it will be (as it has been heretofore) considered by me as a recommendation in favor of the applicant for employment he seeks. I should be glad to have my attention called to any violation of the law with reference to this subject. Yours respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Secretary Whitney's letter was at once shown to Commander Chandler and the seven veterans were at once reinstated in their positions.

THE AFGHAN QUESTION.

A Russian Agent Has Found the Key to Its Solution—The Heir to the Afghan Throne Discovered at Galveston.

GALVESTON, Tex., Oct. 1.—A consular agent of the Russian government made a discovery in this city recently which may lead to a settlement of the Afghan question in a manner by no means advantageous to English interests in Central Asia. In 1838 England declared war against Afghanistan and sent an army into that country to dethrone the then reigning prince, Dost Mohammed, who had unfortunately incurred the displeasures of the English by waging war against Runjet Sing, who was their ally. Candahar, Ghuzeni, and Kabool surrendered to the English. Dost Mohammed was deposed an Shah Soujah, whom the English claimed to be the lawful heir to that throne was installed King and the dethroned prince was sent to India. The conquest of the country seemed accomplished and Shah Shujah was recognized by the natives as worthy the crown, he being, as the believed, a true Dorani. Dost Mohammed was of Gelzais, an inferior tribe to the Dorranis. In November, 1841, an insurrection, said to have been inspired by Dost Mohammed through his emissaries, broke out in Kabool and the English garrison of the city was forced to capitulate Jan. 1, 1842. The terms of capitulation were that the English should leave the country and the fifth day after the surrender they marched out of Kabool en route to India, having received a promise from the Afghan chiefs of safe conduct. During the march the English became a disorganized mob, and while in that condition were set upon by the mountain tribes and destroyed, but one man of the 16,500 English and their allies who left Kabool under that safe conduct reaching the frontier to tell of the massacre. Shah Shujah was assassinated sometime before the insurrection, and his son, Fetteh Jung, succeeded him, but, despairing of being able to hold his position, fled to India in disguise, where he died in extreme poverty in 1855, leaving a son of tender years, who is now to be brought forward as heir-apparent to the throne of Afghanistan. The lad, being without money or friends, adopted the life of a tramp, and in his wanderings reached the City of Calcutta, where he shipped on board an English East Indiaman bound for Liverpool. He was then traced back to India, and again left that country in 1861 for New York, where he arrived just as the civil war broke out. He at once enlisted in a New York regiment composed of Turks, Greeks, Italians and waifs from all lands. He was captured at the battle of Seven Pines and confined in Libby prison until the close of the war. After his release he resumed the life of a sailor, visiting all quarters of the globe, and was with the intrepid Stanley In Central Africa when he went to the relief of Livingstone. He went thence to Zanzibar and entered the military service of the sultan in that country, remaining until 1875. when he was compelled to fly to escape being bowstringed for expressing views detrimental to the government. After his summary departure from Zanzibar all traces of the son of Fettah Jung were lost, and for a time it was thought he had perished of African fever or been drowned at sea. Search was, however, vigorously maintained, with the hope that he still survived. Russian agents searched every part of the Union, arriving in this city en route to Mexico. One explored it thoroughly for the rightful heir to the throne of Afghanistan, and when about to embark for Vera Cruz discovered a man of Oriental appearance employed at a fruit stand who answered the destription. The agent engaged the man in conversation and foun he had the accent of the natives of Turkestan. The agent invited the man to call upon him at his hotel, where he quickly satisfied himself that he had found the true heir to the throne of Afghanistan. The agent at once cabled the facts to the Russian government and asked for instructions which he received last Saturday. Sunday he left for St. Petersburg via New York, and it is expected this heir to the throne of Afghanistan will soon be with Alinanoff at Penjdeh, awaiting the command of the czar for the Russian columns to move upon Herat and place him in rightful possession of the throne from which his father was driven forty-three years ago. These facts were obtained from a detective from Scotland Yard, London, who has shadowed the Russian agent and followed him to this city.

A BIG INCREASE.

The clearings of the Kansas City associated banks for the week ended to-day make a wonderful showing and one which will doubtless put Kansas City at the head of the list in the increase column, when the comparison with other cities is made.

The total clearings for the six days were $4,708,856 against $2,616,335 for the corresponding week last year—a gain of $2,092,521, or 80 per cent. The increase over last week is over $700,000, or about 17 per cent.

IT is not too soon to begin to view the field and, if possible, find the right men to stand for city offices next spring.

THE improved appearance of THE STAR in its new dress, and printed on its new press, is appreciated by all its readers.

THE STAR was the only paper in Kansas City to receive by wire and give its readers the lectures of Canon FARRAR at Buffalo and Baltimore.

THERE is not an important railroad town in Kansas, Southern Nebraska or Western Missouri where THE STAR has not a handsome circulation. Advertisers appreciate that the newspaper field tributary to Kansas City is covered by THE STAR and patronize it accordingly.

AT last the Ohio gubernatorial candidates have plucked up sufficient courage, and will meet on the stump at Toledo, Oct. 8, and Cincinnati Oct. 10. This style of campaigning should give the Buckeye voter a pretty fair opportunity of judging of the principles on which the candidates seek election.

THAT investments in cable railroads in Kansas City pay better than in horse car lines notwithstanding the great difference in cost, is being rapidly demonstrated. Time is money in Kansas City and the patient mule will have to go. Fifteenth street is now asking for cable cars and other streets are making preparation to secure them.

IT is stated on pretty good authority that a thorough understanding has been arrived at by the Missouri delegation in regard to the division of the spoils in this state. Of course, there will be plenty of complaint, for there are not near enough offices to go around and after they are all filled the congressmen and senators will have even less peace than before, and the Democrats will find that a political victory isn't half so sweet as they had for many years believed.

ANOTHER porkpacker from St. Louis is coming to Kansas City—the only rival of Chicago as a pork center. Mr. JOHN WHITTAKER of FRANCIS WHITTAKER & Sons, is in the city negotiating for the purchase of a site for a new packing house. Mr. WHITTAKER will be welcomed, and will be treated royally. There is no prejudice here against St. Louis. We will take her people or her business as either is offered.

PEOPLE in Texas have apparently been getting a great deal of credit for being bold and bad to which they were not entitled. Yesterday six stalwart Texans, armed cap-a-pie, sat in the Abilene stage with chattering teeth, quaking knees and hands uplifted as if in supplication to heaven while a youth of fifteen summers calmly relieved them of their valuables and rifled the mail sacks. Had they been New York dudes it is probable the precocious lad would have been spanked and sent home.

A RATHER startling and damaging story is being circulated in New York to the effect that HILL, the Democratic candidate for governor, was a partner with TWEED during the days of the ring's power. It is further stated that in the session of the legislature of 1870-71, while still the business partner of TWEED, HILL voted with the ring in every instance and aided in carrying out the greatest steals ever devised by the famous boss. The worst feature of the whole business for Mr. HILL is that documents are in existence to prove the truth of this story.

THE Mugwumps are sure to be the victims of denunciation from one or the other of the political parties. This year the Democrats are disgusted because the independent voters and independent newspapers in New York decline to support the Democratic nominees for state offices. As the independents rather enjoy the abuse of the politicians and as the politicians find comfort in giving vent to their indignation, no harm is being done. The independent vote is constantly growing in strength and in time the politicians will learn that it is a factor which will have to be considered in making party nominations.

PHILADELPHIA'S preachers recently protested against the new special delivery postal service being made applicable to Sunday business on the ground that it is an unnecessary violation of the day. The Indianapolis News points out the folly of this complaint and holds that the new service may be made to work a decided reformation. By its universal adoption the general delivery may be closed on the Sabbath, as any letter whose importance demands its delivery on Sunday will be worth the ten cents necessary to secure the advantages of the new service. This view of the matter is a very sensible and practical one and should commend itself not only to moralists but to the postoffice department as well.

NEW YORK Mugwumps are not a bit discouraged and evidently propose to make themselves heard in the present campaign. At a meeting of the Independent committee of One Hundred in Brooklyn, last night, the course of the administration was endorsed in the same breath with the candidacy of DAVENPORT for governor. HENRY WARD BEECHER seemed to express the sentiment of the meeting when he said that he was still a Democrat so far as GROVER CLEVELAND was concerned but a Republican in regard to the state ticket. The party managers will begin to understand after awhile that the Mugwumps are thoroughly in earnest and that they are capable of thinking for themselves and courageous enough to act on their convictions. After one or two more campaigns the politicians will find it to their advantage to nominate clean men and men of principle for office if they expect success.

Will Go On An Excursion.

A meeting of Kansas City Lodge No. 185 A. O. U. W. was held last night at Pythian Hall and arrangements were made to go to Moberly on an excursion Oct. 21.

Value of Personal Charms.

Mme. De Stael, who was plain and quite stout, once said: "I would give half my knowledge for a few personal charms and consider them cheaply bought."

THE CITY.

A Change in the City School District Needed.

A Rumor that Crisp Wants to be Postmaster.

An Early Morning Scene at a Country Spring.

An Eldorado for Young Men—Other City News.

The Present School District.

Charts showing the location of the school districts in the city have been received at the board of education rooms and will be placed in the school buildings next week. A glance at the chart is sufficient to indicate the necessity of making a change in the present existing school boundaries, especially on the south and east. Mr. W. E. Benson, in speaking of the matter to a STAR reporter to-day, said that the present southern line of the school district is about a mile north of the new city limits on the south. This district line was established in 1868, when the outlook for the future of the city was not particularly bright. At the same time the eastern limit of the school district was established at Prospect avenue and extended north to the river. For sixteen years no change was made in the boundaries, but at last the east bottoms and certain portions of the east side knocked at the door of the public schools and were admitted. This required a change in the eastern boundary of the school district and last year the change was made. Beginning at Prospect avenue, about 100 feet north of Blue avenue (Fifteenth street), the line was drawn due east to the old Steel road, one-quarter of a mile east of the Porter road. From this point it was extended due north to the high bluffs overlooking the territory east of the glucose works, where it turned west and followed the bluff to a point one-quarter of a mile west of the Porter road (the new city limits on the east) and then bore in a northerly direction to the Missouri river. All the territory in the new limits east of Prospect avenue and south of Fifteenth street lies outside the school district, and children are compelled either to pay a yearly tuition or go without school privileges. It is quite generally believed that the limits of the school district and city limits are the same, and citizens who live east of Prospect avenue and yet within the limits of the city can not quite understand why they are not entitled to free instruction. "We pay city taxes," they say, "then why should we be forced to pay tuition for every child we send to the public schools?" This is a statement of facts which it is not easy to explain away.

On the south the city boundary is fully three-fourths of a mile south of the school district. On the east and south of Fifteenth street an extensive territory lies outside the district. North of Fifteenth street the school district extends a quarter of a mile beyond the eastern limits of the city. At the bluff which overlooks the east bottoms the line takes a westward shoot and leaves a quarter of a mile of the city lying outside the school district. These lines, in the opinion of Mr. Benson, should be changed so as to bring all the city within the school-district. If the people will take the first step and at the next election vote to be taken in, the school board will make the change desired.

HOW TO ACQUIRE WEALTH.

The Operation a Simple and by No Means a Laborious One in Kansas City.

The art of money getting, which puzzles and disheartens so many men in other cities of more conservative growth, is a very simple one in Kansas City. Here any young man of good habits, even although he does not get a large salary, can become a capitalist in a very few years by the exercise of ordinary economy and co-operation with the real estate market. No young man, with a permanent position in Kansas City, and in possession of all his faculties, mental and physical, can consistently complain, if after three years he is still without a financial start. In other cities, particularly those in the east, the labor of money getting is tedious and severe. Nothing can be expected beyond the mere result of saving, and a possible addition of 8 per cent. A young man in an eastern city, who has succeeded in saving $100, feels that he has an investment if he gets 6 or 8 per cent in some building association of uncertain security. In Kansas City his $100 would either buy a suburban lot outright or make a substantial payment on city property. In either event, if he failed to realize 100 per cent on the increase in value of the property his case would be exceptional.

As Kansas City is growing now it is not laying the foundation for the worst of all evils in great cities—a very small rich class and a very large poor class. The mass of the people has a substantial interest in the city, an interest which grows as the city grows. It is a well known fact that there are an unusual number of property owners in proportion to the population of Kansas City. This desirable condition can only be perpetuated by a united effort on the part of young men and new comers to do all in their power to advance their own interests. This demand certainly is not an unreasonable one, nor one that will grate on the feelings of a thoroughly selfish man. If the individuals will work, at least while they are getting started, exclusively for their own personal advancement, the city will take care of itself. No man is asked to give any substantial evidence of public spirit in Kansas City until he has thoroughly settled the question of his own success or failure. In the meantime he shares all the benefits of the efforts and expenditures of the public spirited citizens. Of the thousands of young men employed in Kansas City, few make any effort to save money beyond the hoarding of a few dollars with which to enrich a fashionable tailor. These young men profess to belong to the enjoy-life-while-you-are-young school of philosophy, which includes being a burden to yourself and your friends when you are old. The thought of economy appears to be antipathetic to them, but the practice of extravagance makes them miserable because it offers no future. They try to believe in Byron when he says:

"The myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty,
Are worth all your laurels, however so plenty."

Age and poverty soon cram this merry jingle down the improvident young man's throat. There is no pleasure so genuine and substantial as the pleasure of accumulation, and there is no place for rapid accumulation like Kansas City. For instance a young physician who came to this city three years ago only practiced his profession long enough to accumulate $1,400. He then abandoned his patients and with his $1,400 began buying real estate. He has had no assistance since except the powerful co-operation of Kansas City's constant boom, and to-day he is worth $25,000. His case is but a repetition of the experiences of the city's wealthiest men, except that it proves Kansas City to be quite as valuable a partner in the real estate business now as it has been in the past.

IMPROVING THE MILK.

An Early Rising Civil Engineer Tells How the Milk Ordinance is Already Having Its Effect.

"For several days past," said a young civil engineer to-day, "I have had work which has taken me out on the Westport road very early in the morning. About a mile beyond the Westport street car barns there is a spring of very pure water—Rock spring I believe it is called. Every morning at about daylight as I pass this spring I find from three to a dozen milk wagons standing along the road, and the milk-men industriously filling their cans with the spring water. They leave their dairies with their cans all partly filled, and fill them at the spring. The first morning I ran across these pirates, I felt rather embarrassed—as though I was an intruder, but they did not appear to object to my presence in the least. In fact they treated the operation as a matter of course. One of them, a fellow I happened to know, told me he preferred the spring water because it would not settle and leave a sediment which would betray the fraud. He said the spring would suffer for the passage of that milk ordinance, that the dairymen would have to 'make up' in some way for the payment of $50 required by the law. Some of these dairymen have the gall to 'rub it in' on the public by naming their dairies after some spring."

The Cable Snaps.

The cars on the cable line were brought to a standstill yesterday evening by the breaking of the cable at Woodland avenue, but the damage was repaired during the night and this morning the cars were running as usual. When the cable snapped a car was approaching the West Ninth street incline. William Howell, the gripman, promptly dropped the cable, put on the shoe brake and brought the cars to a standstill almost instantly. The passengers were frightened badly and one gentleman jumped from the embankment but escaped without injury.

A CRISP RUMOR.

A Report Bruited About that Crisp is Seeking the Kansas City Postoffice.

It is now but a short time until the commission of Colonel T. S. Case, as postmaster of Kansas City will expire and the question as to who will succeed him is being generally discussed. Some consider the matter speculatively, caring but little who succeeds the present incumbent so long as he is honest and well qualified to fill the important office; others however from purely personal reasons look upon the pending change as "vexed question," which they would like to see speedily settled. They, of course, are personally interested in the matter and some of them are reported to have been industriously at work for months past endeavoring to secure an appointment to the office.

The latest rumor is that Colonel Crisp, facetiously called "Jumbo," is an applicant for the office and that he would work with his customary zeal to secure the appointment. The fact that Colonel Crisp has of late been making frequent visits to Kansas City gives color to the report. A gentleman who is said to be an applicant for the office of postmaster—although he denies the report—said to a STAR reporter to-day:

"The rumor is new to me and I am unable to say whether or not there is any truth in it. It will do Crisp no good to seek the office, however, as he will not secure the appointment. Even if he should be appointed he would not be confirmed."

Amusements.

Miss Myra Goodwin appeared at the Coates last night in a very clever little comedy entitled "Sis." Miss Goodwin proved herself much of an actress and justified all the praise which has been bestowed upon her wherever she has appeared. To-night the same.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the old time favorite, Sol Smith Russell will be at the Coates house with his new play, "Felix McCusick."

Prof. Morris and his Equine Paradox close at the Gillis to-night. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Den Thompson with his "Josh Whitcomb" will be at the Gillis, and the latter part of the week the Adah Richmond burlesque company.

To-morrow night Mr. Brewster, who had some experience with "Prison Life in Kansas City," will lecture on that subject at the Gillis.

Official Hunters.

Mayor Moore and Assistant City Counselor Alderson left the city early this morning on a duck hunting expedition. Alderson took with him a copy of the city charter to see that the slaughter of ducks was conducted according to law, while the mayor went forth prepared to "bull" or "bear" the duck market as the occasion might demand. At noon a report was received at police headquarters that the mayor had succeeded in shooting off the head of a decoy duck and had also filled an aged frog full of bird shot. Alderson did some remarkably fine execution with the gun during the afternoon and several times shot the cork out of a bottle at short range. At last accounts they were negotiating with a boy for the purchase of a half dozen birds at 5 cents each.

Failed to Agree.

The case against C. P. McVeigh, charged with felonious assault, was tried at Independence yesterday, but the jury could not agree upon a verdict. McVeigh is a citizen of Lone Jack, and has a strong penchant for loading himself down with revolvers and a Winchester rifle. Last June he was working in a field when some one fired on him. He went to his house, armed himself, and returned to the field. He failed to find the person who shot at him, but his "dander" was up, so he bombarded the woods and corn-fields in all directions. Bateman and several others were working upon a culvert within range of McVeigh's heavy artillery, and they swore that Bateman was shot at.

An Excursion Steamer Ordered.

A company has been organized for the purpose of purchasing an excursion boat to be run between this city and up river points. Capt. Jacob Hazlep has ordered a boat of the following dimensions: 225 feet long, 35 feet beam, 6 foot hold, 20 inch cylinders, 8 foot stroke. It will be built as an excursion boat and will cost about $35,000. It will cost from $30 to $40 to run it.

Losses Adjusted.

The loss occasioned by the North-Orrison fire has been adjusted and the insurance companies will pay to the firm $74,556.25. The firm claimed the full amount of its insurance, $75,000, but the insurance companies endeavored to compromise by paying $60,000. North, Orrison & Co. finally sued for the full amount but the matter was finally adjusted to the satisfaction of the firm.

Police Court News.

In the recorder's court this morning twenty-five cases were disposed of. Of these there were twelve drunks, eight nuisance cases, and one disturber of the peace. There was a boom in the number arrested for carrying concealed weapons, Thomas Shaunessy, Frank Hudson, Ed. Simmons and Patrick Fitzpatrick, all receiving $50 fines for this offense.

Awarded Damages.

The breach of promise suit brought by Miss Eva Vernaz, of Warrensburg, against David Hughes, of Kansas City, was tried at Independence yesterday and resulted in a verdict in favor of Miss Vernaz for damages to the amount of $15,000. A motion for a new trial was filed on the ground that the verdict was excessive.

Robbed of His Clothing.

A gentleman living at the corner of Seventh and Penn streets awoke this morning to find missing his watch, a suit of clothes, and a sum of money. In fact he was left in such a condition that he had to borrow a suit of clothes before he could go down to police headquarters and report the matter.

"Old Jim" Dead.

"Old Jim," one of the pioneer horses of the fire department, was shot yesterday to end his misery. He served in the department for sixteen years, but about two weeks ago he began to fail, and yesterday it became necessary to kill him. His shoes will be taken off and nickle-plated.

Frank James as a Clerk.

It is stated on good authority that Frank James has accepted the position of clerk in a store at Nevada, Mo. James has had more experience as a farmer than he has had as a clerk, but it is believed that he will prove a drawing card for the merchant who has employed him.

The Barbarous Wire.

A dog having the appearance of having had its throat cut attracted some attention at the corner of Seventh and Main streets this morning. Some one had been trying to catch him with a wire, and had thus cut around the throat considerably.

The Paola Branch.

The committee appointed by the advocates of the Paola branch railroad met in the office of the secretary of the board of trade this morning. No definite conclusions were reached, although the discussion lasted two hours.

Chief Hale's Loss.

Some enterprising thief stole Chief Hale's saddle and bridle last night. He left his horse standing behind his house and was absent only a few minutes, but when he returned both saddle and bridle were gone.

Bar Association Meeting.

The second annual meeting of the Kansas City Bar association will be held this evening at the room of the court of appeals, Ninth and Walnut streets. The annual election of officers will be held.

Ordered to Leave the City.

C. F. Watts, and "Doc" Green, the two confidence men arrested by Detectives Hartley and Hunt, last evening, were "shown up" at roll call to-day, and let go under promise to leave he city by noon.

Licensed to Marry.

Licenses to marry were issued to the following parties to-day: John Schenoel and Miss Susanna Mayer, both of this county; Hermann Heide and Miss Dora Saltz, also of this county.

Bound Over.

Hurle and Carroll, the men accused of robbing a safe at Mayview, had their preliminary examination yesterday and were bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

A Supposed Burglar.

Geo. Wilson was arrested this morning on suspicion of being the party who burglarized the store of A. J. Dicker, in Lawrence, Kas., Thursday night. A partial list of the articles taken was published in yesterday's STAR and on the person of Wilson were found several dozen handkerchiefs, knifes and other articles taken. A reward of $50 is offered in case of the man being the right one. He was arrested by Officer H. Davis, and will be taken to Lawrence this afternoon.

In a Critical Condition.

Sames Smith, the colored man whom Ed. Franks struck over the head with a piece of gas pipe, is still in a very critical condition.

A Jail Sentence.

Henry Martin and Thos. Clark, two boys charged with stealing a shawl, were to-day sentenced to thirty days in the county jail.

Births and Deaths.

The report of Dr. H. B. Wood shows that during the month of September there were 105 births and 99 deaths in the city.

The Permanent Exposition.

A meeting of the Permanent Exposition committee will be held this evening.

SPORTING.

The Song of Hiawatha Applied to Base Ball—Notes.

Chicago has gone wild over the success of its ball nine over the New York giants. The Tribune bursts forth in the following parody on "Hiawatha:"

Should you ask me whence this legend,
Whence the story of the autumn,
I would answer, I would tell you,
'Tis the song of How-we-got-there
Of the Kicker-poos, the modest,
And the boasters, the Manhattans,
In the land of the Porkmakahs,
Close beside the big clue water.

From the east came the Manhattan,
From the land of Knickerbokkah,
Came with mighty talk from Mutrie,
This Iagoo, the great boaster,
Saying: "We will teach these gophers,
Feeble gophers of the prairie,
How to wield the heavy willow,
Teach them what the game of ball is,
We will humble the Porkmakahs!"
Then the wise men, the Porkmakahs,
Sent the Kicker-poos, their young men,
Saying to them: "Meet these giants,
Put an end to all this nonsense,
Strip them of their gaudy wampum,
Show them what the game of ball is!"
And the Kicker-poos, the young men,
Nine reluctant, modest, young men,
Struggled with the proud Manhattans,
Took the twister, Hardtogeton,
And the curve, the Paralyzah,
Sent them upward, sent them onward,
With the flight of bird of swiftness,
Of the grouse, the Mushkodasa,
Or the heron, the Shuh-shuh-gah,
Pasted the deceptive leather,
Pasted it for many bases,
Sent the skimmer, Daisycutta,
And the flyer, the Skyscrapa,
Ran like deer between the bases,
Ran with such exceeding swiftness
That their shadows lagged behind them,
So that often, when the batter
Reached the home plate in his running,
Back at second base his shadow
Would be hurrying on to catch him.
And the Kicker-poos, the young men,
In the field were like the panther,
Swift and lithe and keen of eyesight,
Seized the grounder, Tearthemudup,
And the liner, Hotasthunder,
Hurled them backward to the bases
As the lightning sends its flashes,
Slaughtered there the proud Manhattans,
Slaughtered them as they were running,
Took their scalps and all their wampum.
And the overweening Mutrie,
This Iagoo, the great boaster,
Saw the fiery eyes of Panguk
Gleaming at him in the sunshine.

From the land of Knickerbokkah
Came a sound of lamentation:
"Where," they cried, "are all our young men,
Where our sluggers, the Manhattans?"
There was gloom within their lodges,
But beside the big blue water,
In the lodges of the village,
Village of the wise Porkmakahs
(Greatest of resorts for summer)
There was sung the song of triumph,
And the Kicker-poos, the young men,
Danced the scalp-dance, Paintthetownred.

"Can it be the sun descending
O'er the level plain of water,
Or the Red Swan floating, dying,
Staining all the waves with crimson?"
No, it is the bright reflection
Of the pennant, Itsourplundah,
Gleaming on the lake's blue surface
In the land of the Porkmakahs,
In the city of Chicago.

MISTAKEN FOR A SENATOR.

Favors Heaped Upon a Restaurant Man by a Deluded Steamship Company.

[Chicago Daily News.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—A well known restaurant keeper of this city returned this morning from an European tour and tells this interesting story: "I asked a friend, a well known lobbyist, if he could procure me a pass from New York to Liverpool. He said nothing was easier, and within a week a pass, signed by the agent of one of the largest trans-atlantic line of steamers, was in my pocket. When I mentioned my name to the purser I was surprised at the amount of deference that functionary paid me. My stateroom was the finest on board the vessel. A handsome vase filled with choice flowers was a conspicuous ornament on my dressing bureau. During the entire trip everybody, from the captain down, treated me with the most distinguished courtesy. I couldn't understand it, but supposed it was all right. Similar attentions followed on the return trip, and when I landed at New York the agent met me at the wharf. After an exchange of compliments he said: 'Now, senator, when any legislation comes up at Washington inimical to our interests next winter, I hope you will remember us and see that we receive due consideration.'

"'Senator?' I exclaimed, 'I'm not a senator. I am the proprietor of the —— hotel.'

"He bit his lip a moment to conceal his vexation, and then calmly remarked: 'I beg your pardon; I see I was mistaken,' and entering his carriage drove rapidly away. My waggish friend, the lobbyist, it appears, told them I was a United States senator when he applied for my pass, and it was a lively sense of favors to come that led them to treat me with such marked distinction.

Johnny the Fake.

[New York Journal.]

"Tough case, poor fellow," said Deputy Coroner Jenkins last night, as he left a restaurant on Park row, at the door of which he had parted with an undersized youth of about 19.

"Yes, it is a hard case," said a friend who saw the doctor and the youth together, and grinned at the doctor's sympathetic expression.

"Why, how do you know?" asked the doctor.

"Experience. Poor boy in front of a newspaper office. 'Black your boots for 2 cents.' Very pathetic. Don't get your boots blacked, but give him a dime. Ask questions. Poor fellow has been sick. Needs a new box to go into day business. Give him a dollar to buy a new box.

"Yes," exclaimed the doctor, "I gave him a dollar and a square meal. How do you know?"

"Gave him 50 cents last month and saw other fools, yourself included, give Johny the fake money."

"Please kick me," moaned the crushed doctor, "but don't say anything about it. Taken in by a confidence operator on a small scale. I ought to be kicked.

A Successful Old Hunter.

[Red Bluff Sentinel.]

Major William Hensley came into town yesterday from his mineral springs, about thirty-five miles from Red Bluff, in the Coast range, bringing with him seven bear scalps—black and cinnamon. Four of them were killed with a "set gun," by which means the bear springs the trigger and kills himself while endeavoring to reach the bait. A yearling was caught in a steel trap and the two largest the major killed with his trusty old muzzle-loader, a Kentucky rifle, that has been in use over fifty years. One of them he shot at when about forty yards distant; the ball went directly through his heart and he lived but a few minutes. The other was killed across a canyon, about 150 yards away, the ball striking nearly the same as the other. He has got all seven within six weeks, and the bounty at $10 each, will be very good wages for that length of time. He has also killed several large bucks, but did not hunt them particularly, devoting all his time to the bears. The major is 70 years old and can get his game under almost any circumstance.

A STORY-TELLING VEIN

JAY GOULD'S FIRST AND ONLY DRINK.

He Tells the Result—Penny-a-Liner Declared to be a Misnomer—Merchants' Precautions Against Pilferers—Keeping His Employes Honest—Other Notes.

[Special Correspondence of The Star.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—Jay Gould really seems to have set out to enjoy the rest of his life. Whether he intends to scheme any the less for the transfer of other men's money into his own vault is a subject on which he lets me remain ignorant; but I am sure that he is making an earnest endeavor to amuse himself with his magnificent steam yacht Atalanta, and I guess that he is succeeding. His gasconade in making a match between his vessel and another has a tone of sincere enjoyment, and he spends considerable time afloat. He was met on deck by appointment the other day by several yachtsmen, and he talked in a nautical way without any misuse of terms or lack of animation. He even told a story in a jolly manner.

"Will you drink a whisky cocktail?" one of the visitors asked.

The milliionaire construed this as a hint that he ought to provide refreshments, and he said: "There's plenty of beverage in my cabin, gentlemen."

"Thank you; not for me," responded the other. "My inquiry was if you would drink a whisky cocktail. I wish to decide a bet. A friend said that he had seen you take one, and I held that he was mistaken—that you do not taste distilled liquor under any circumstance. Will you decide?"

"Yes, and in your favor," was the good humored reply. "It must be more than a quarter of a century since I tasted what's called hard liquor. In fact, my first drink was my last, so far as whisky is concerned. In the days when I was a surveyor in a small way, and was mapping the county on the practical plan of getting my lodgings and meals of the farmers in exchange for marking correct sundials on their doorsteps, I became dreadfully tired one hot, dusty afternoon. I came along to a country tavern. In my pocket was a five cent piece. I hadined well enough on bread and milk, and did not doubt that a supper and bed would be obtained in the usual way, but it suddenly struck me that as a medicine to relieve faintness I ought to buy a glass of whisky with my half dime. I was ignorant of bar usage, and so, when a bottle and glass were set before me, I filled the tumbler chock full. The bartender made no protest and I swallowed the big horn. Then I went my way, trundling my wheelbarrow-like measurer of distances, and occasionally taking the bearings with my sextant. Never in my life had my work gone off half so blithesomely, and for awhile I felt as though making a map of the starry heavens instead of a very dusty portion of this mundane sphere. After an hour or more of exaltation I grew sleepy and took a long nap under a tree in a field. I awoke with an awful headache and found that the figures entered in my notebook during the time of extra steam were incoherent. I was fully convinced that and I have never tried it for any other purpose."

WHISKY WAS A BAD SURVEYOR,

In the course of conversation on the same occasion the term penny-a-liner was carelessly used to designate a man who wrote for a newspaper independently, selling his articles separately. Gould remarked that during his ownership of the World (and at that time he familiarized himself with the practical workings of journalism) he learned that the phrase was vastly misleading—that in point of fact the cheapest writing done by the poorest reporters commanded two cents a line, and that ordinarily good composition was paid for at about three or four cents, while specialists demanded considerable more. He suggested that nickel-a-liner would be a more accurate title. He was right. The only writers literally described by the old epithet are authors of books, who are badly recompensed as a rule. Exceptional producers of fiction get high pay, but a preponderance of the stories to the cheap prints are got for almost or quite nothing from amateurs, usually women, whose trash hits the vulgar liking, and who are anxious to get into print anyhow.

In the matter of pay for services, the general assumption in the business of New York city has come to be that all men are thieves. That seems harsh and hard, but experience has taught that safety against robbery lies in treating every handler of one's money as possibly dishonest. It is only ten years ago that street car conductors were indignant because the bell punch was introduced; but some of them soon proved, by ingenious devices to beat it, that they deserved the precaution. Mechanical guards against stealing have multiplied, until now a machine for registering receipts is conspicuous on the half cashiers' desks in town. Bartenders in the bigger groggeries have to hand all the money to a chap behind an apparatus that stamps the amount of every sale on a strip of paper, and drops a clipped bit into a locked receptacle. There is a man who owns thirteen large bar rooms, all extravagantly fitted up, and located in places of fashionable thronging. He says that he would be ruined in a year, instead of enriched by his extensive business, if he did not take such measures against pilfering. Every horse car company uses a complicated and effective system of bell ringing and registry for fares. Retail stores of all kinds are similarly outfitted. Even the more prosperous soda water and segar stands are provided with checks and clock work to enforce honesty. On the Brooklyn elevated railroad, the ticket sellers do not so much as touch the tickets, but jigger them out through the spout of a registering machine, from which the passengers carry them to the drop boxes at the gates. Thus nobody employed in the stations ever handles a ticket, and there is no chance for collusion. Resentment over these things has worn away, and I shouldn't be much surprised at the early introduction of patent, self-registering contribution baskets in church.

THE GOOD DEACON HUYLER,

noted for piety and fresh-every-hour candy, and warmly eulogized after his recent death for having insisted that the girls in his store should all belong to his Sunday school class, did not allow religion to be their only shield against temptation.

'What makes you use checks and a punching box on your counters, Brother Huyler?" a fellow churchman asked. "Are not your young ladies honest?"

"Perfectly," was the bland reply, "and I mean to make it easy for them to keep so."

After the inventors have solved the problem of compelling all of us to be honest to our employers, perhaps they will discover how to make us true to ourselves, and then we shall have the millenium.

One of the falsities is being obliterated by an official discrimination between melody and beggary. The law against mendicancy is pretty generally enforced in this city. The old-time cripples and blind wretches are scarce in the streets, the police being ordered to arrest them whenever they are caught soliciting alms. But it is not always easy to draw the line at the bounds of legitimate occupation. The ostensible peddler of pencils may practically be a beggar, the whining offer of pins for sale may be a plea for gift coin, and the crank-turner of a hand organ is likelier to be a professional exciter of pity rather than of mere torture. The chief of police has decided, however, that the street musician's instrument must at least be noisy, else he shall be adjudged a beggar. There is a kind of organ called in the trade a wheezer. Those who hear its few audible notes to the many skipped ones imagine that the player is too miserably poor to repair a worn-out cylinder. Not so. The thing is made that way in order to be pathetic. The operator is usually a crouching old crone, and midnight is her favorite time of work. A new police mandate is that wheezers shall not be regarded as musical instruments, and that those who turn the ineffectual cranks shall be arrested as public beggars.

Interrupted music was made oddly appealing by

JUDIC, THE FRENCH ACTRESS,

who arrived in town preparatory to the outstretching of her palms for American dollars, and her manager gave the usual private view to the reporters. This was a peculiarly difficult performance, because long prosperity in Paris had fattened her beyond the point ordinarily considered desirable in women, and it was feared that, in conversation at short range, through an interpreter, she would not be able to employ those witcheries that had made her stage fortunes. But she was carefully costumed for the ordeal, and the freshmen in journalism were politely invited to go to her hotel at a certain hour. There she gently pressed their hands in greeting, smiled on them as they sat or stood in a semi-circle round her, and talked in French, which Exhibitor Grau interpreted to the listeners. The still fair though forty Judic was a much comelier structure than the wheezer of the curb, and the music of her voice was pleasanter than the notes of that miserable instrument, but there was the same sort of silent intervals while she kept in motion. Let me explain. You are aware of the vivacity of French utterance—of the pretty grimaces, neat shrugs and expressive little gestures with which Aimee or any other Parision expert embellishes her speech; and you can understand how, when only one or two out of a dozen reporters understood her language as uttered, the rest having to wait until Grau had repeated it in English, it would have been easy to lose all the effect of her exquisite pantomime. That was to be averted if possible. But how? The wit of the woman devised a way. While speaking she merely beamed like a mother on the young fellows, omitting the demonstrations that I have mentioned; but, while Grau was interpreting what she had said, she went through with the deferred gesticulation and facial expressions as a dumb accompaniment. There was not a perfect adjustment of action to word, of course, but the expedient was tolerably effective, besides being comical.

YOUNG HENRY CHANFRAU

is this week as "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler," recalling the skill of his father in the part. What I am especially reminded of is the answer that the senior once made when I asked him how, being a man of refinement and culture, he could keep up a sufficient interest in so rough a character to constantly act it thirteen years without impairment of its artistic qualities. I could conceive of such a man sticking fast to the qualities of a congenial role, but Chanfrau's case had puzzled me.

"Of course there's no art attractiveness in this sort of work," he replied, "and my sole incentive is the cash income. I have made a fortune as Kit, and that ought to satisfy me. So it does, but the impersonation long ago become mechanical. A good deal of the time that I am on the stage, speaking the lines of the part, I am actually thinking of something else, just as a shoemaker might be meditating on his soul's salvation while hammering the sole of a boot. I charge my business agent and others around me to tell me at once whenever they detect any falling off, and, with these nudges, I brace up the spots that become weakened. But I believe I have acted "Kit" clear through a performance without once putting my mind on it at all. Mrs. Maggie Mitchell is a neighbor of mine down at Long Branch, and she has told me that in "Fanchon," which she has played year after year, she has the same experience. She says, though, that her prod is applied by the audience. She will go along absent-mindedly, scarcely aware of the familiar task that she is engaged in, until some pathetic point fails to excite the accustomed rustle of interest, or a sentence or skip doesn't produce the usual laughter, and then she is recalled to a consciousness of what she is doing."

A case is under the consideration of the district attorney in which, as an excuse for bigamy, a man says that he forgot while marrying the second woman that he had ever wedded the first. Absent-mindedness has always been his trouble, he explains, and that is all there is of his offense. He is believed to tell the truth, though the failing of memory is thought to have amounted at times to insanity.

KANS.

An Old Sea-Dog.

[Hartford Post.]

Job Shuttle keeps up with the times, and that he doesn't know about yacht racing and "balloon jibs" and "gaff topsails" hasn't yet appeared in the papers. Of course he was excited over the victory of the Puritan, and his night's rest was as light as the breeze that barely sent the yachts across the line.

"What in Neptune's the matter with that brat? Why don't you starboard the cradle and take advantage of the squall?" he shouted impatiently.

"Reef your lower jawsail," retorted Mrs. S——, who is something of a sea-dog herself.

Job sprang out of bed in a rage, his mainsail flying, and yelled: "My goodness! I've run the port-tack half way through my foot!" and the rest of the night he made more noise than the baby.

[Detroit Free Press.]

"If I should ask you to concoct a milk punch for me, could you do it?" he blandly inquired of a Michigan ave. saloonist.

"Yes, sir."

"And if I should consume the said punch and had no money to pay for it, how would you treat me?"

"Give you the bounce?"

"Gently?"

"Not by a long shot!"

"Do your best to injure me, eh?"

"Of course."

"Wouldn't care how much you degraded me in the estimation of the public?"

"No, sir."

"Very well, sir. I always like to have a previous understanding in regard to such matters. You can keep your milk punch and I will keep my dignity."

A BUSTED MISSION.

The Heartrending Failure Made by Mormons in Hindoostan.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 3.—Reports have been received through official channels of the apparent utter failure of the recent Mormon mission sent to India. The mission consisted of Elder Wellis and Messrs. McCune and Pratt. Their arrival at Calcutta was reported by the United States vice consul to the secretary of state. Minister Lowell, by direction of Secretary Frelinghuyson, officially called the attention of the British authorities to the subject and requested appropriate instructions be issued to proper authorities with a view to checking any shipment of Mormon recruits to the United States. The Indian authorities to whom Lowell's communication was referred, stated the harm done by Mormons had been unappreciable and that in the opinion of the government no special measures were at present necessary, but in case of unlawful recruiting of men or women the provisions of the penal code would be applied. The Mormons made no converts in Calcutta. They separated and visited other parts of India, and are reported to have converted two or three persons, but finally became so reduced in finances they were compelled to seek help, and one or more of them left India in a state of destitution.

The Street Car Strike.

[Special Telegram to The Star.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 3.—The situation to-day in the street car agitation briefly stated is this: One member of the district executive board and the grievance committee of the car men are at Central Turner hall continuing the work of initiating members into the order of the Knights of Labor, as it is called, and for the purpose of receiving reports, should any be made of the other four members, who are constituted a committee to arbitrate with the representatives of the railways. This committee is now working arduously, being governed in its course by circumstances to gain in a peaceable manner the points put in its hand for arbitration by the grievance committee of the car men. It wants it understood by the public as the district executive board, it is asking nothing and advising nothing, but is simply handling, as a board of arbitration, the points submitted by the common grievance committee. It is expected that a member of the general executive board will arrive in the city to-day, but for what specific purpose the district board refuses to state. It may be stated, however, without fear of missing the truth much, that he comes because of the possibilities in the situation, i. e.: If a strike occurs it will be turned over to and engineered by the general national executive board.

THREE BANKERS AT LUNCH.

Each One of Them Relates an Alleged True Incident.

New York Times.

Three down-town bankers sat at a lunch table in one of the cozy eating rooms on the top floor of the Mills building. It was after banking hours on a pleasant autumn afternoon. The mild sunlight peered through a bull's eye window facing the bay and danced merrily over the glittering silver and glass paraphernalia of the table. It also caused a blaze of light to flash from the jeweled scarf of one of the bankers. The three gentlemen had met by accident, and they tarried over their coffee and cigars to enjoy a half hour's social chat. One of the number had suggested the desirability of throwing greater safeguards around the cash vaults of banks. "Additional checks should be placed upon the cashiers and tellers," he said. "Banks must either put a stop to these frequent defalcations or they will suffer through the speedy loss of public confidence.

The youngest and smallest member of the trio, who is a brisk, natty gentleman, with grayish side whiskers, a dearth of hair on his head and a keen, observing eye, exclaimed: "Pshaw! what can you do? It is impossible to keep a man honest by watching him. You must trust your cashier and you must trust your teller to a certain extent, no matter how strict your methods are. If a man has a grain of dishonesty in him the realization that he is being watched will excite his baser qualities, and in nine cases out of ten will make a thief of him. There is that in human nature that makes a man—especially a clerk—proud of being trusted. Some men, however, are bound to make thieves, and whether you watch them or trust them makes no difference. I have in mind a notable case of what I call instinctive dishonesty."

"Let us hear it?" exclaimed the other two gentlemen, settling back comfortably in their chairs.

"All right, you shall have it. When my banking house was in Wall st., I lost $5,000 in United States treasury notes of large denominations. One of my customers had left the notes at my office with a request that they be sent to the Bank of ——, which was then, as you know, one of the soundest financial institutions in the city. My customer wanted his notes exchanged for a certified check drawn by that particular bank. Of course, after taking the order I turned the matter over to one of my clerks, and thought no more about it for the time being. A few days afterward the owner of the treasury notes came for his certified check, and I called upon my bookkeeper for it. 'Why, I have seen no such check,' said the bookkeeper.

"'But you must have it,' I insisted. 'I remember distinctly telling you to send the notes to the Bank of —— and exchange them for a certified check.'

"'I recall the circumstance now,' said the bookkeeper, 'but no check was ever brought to me.'

"A diligent search was then made through the office and it did not take long to find the clerk who had dispatched the package of treasury notes to the bank. He speedily picked out the messenger whom he had sent to deliver the notes. The boy was young and, as I thought, very honest and faithful. He remembered having taken the package to the bank, but he said he did not remember any instructions concerning a certified check. He was positive that he took the notes where he was told to take them, but he could not recollect to whom he gave them. He came directly back to my office and nothing was said to him about a certified check. Well, I sent my confidential clerk to the bank of ——, and he saw the president, cashier, and receiving teller, and was assured in the most positive manner by each one of them that no such package of treasury notes as described had been received at their bank. Next I subjected my messenger boy to a searching cross-examination. He stoutly insisted that he had delivered the package as directed, but being a mere lad he naturally became nervous and began to cry. I told him that if he had lost the package and would tell me all about it I would forgive him. He, however, persisted in his first statement, and believing that he had either stolen or lost the notes I discharged him. At the same time I sent the numbers of the missing notes to the treasury department at Washington with the information that the notes had either been lost or stolen."

"Well," interrogated the listeners, as the speaker paused.

"Almost a year passed before I heard anything of those notes. One day I received a letter from the treasury department stating that the missing notes had been presented, together with some other currency, in payment for some registered bonds. I wrote for the name of the person who presented them, and by return mail I received information that staggered me. The $5,000 of treasury notes had been sent to Washington to complete a private purchase of bonds by the president of the very bank to which my messenger had been sent with the package. That man is no longer a bank president, but he is a rich man, and you doubtless would remember him. I had a personal interview with him, and showed him the letters that I had received from the treasury department. He turned as pale as a sheet and trembling asked me to accompany him into a private room. There he broke down completely, confessed that he had stolen the notes, and begged me to accept back the amount with interest, and not to expose him. My first impulse was to denounce him. I reminded him of the disgrace and suffering that his crime had brought upon an innocent boy. He offered to find the boy and give him a better position than he had before, and then he began pleading for the good name of his own family. I asked him how he, a comparatively rich man, could bring himself to steal $5,000, and he told me that he did it under a momentary impulse, and that subsequently he would gladly have returned the money could he have done so without compromising himself. He said that the messenger laid the package down on his desk and went away. The package remained there unnoticed until after banking hours, when he tore one end of the wrapper and saw what it contained. Nobody else in the bank had had seen the notes, and he slipped it into his drawer with the idea that he might as well keep it as no person would be any the wiser. I got my money, with interest," concluded the speaker, "and it was owing to my knowledge of his dishonesty that Mr. —— soon afterward retired from the presidency of the bank."

"What became of the boy?" asked one of the bankers.

"He is now one of the most trusted clerks in my banking house."

"That is a curious story," remarked the elderly member of the party. "I heard a good one, however, in which Russell Sage was concerned. The incident happened only a few months ago, and it was in a financial institution in which Mr. Sage is a director. After the routine business of a directors' meeting had been disposed of one morning, the directors at Mr. Sage's request sent for the President of the institution. 'Mr. ——,' questioned Russell, 'what is the amount of the bond that our Cashier gives us?' The President replied that, as is usual in most banks, the cashier's bond was purely nominal. The amount was $5,000. 'I see that two or three bank cashiers and tellers in this city have run away lately,' said Mr. Sage. 'I think we had better increase the amount of our cashier's bond to $15,000. You please talk with him about it and let us know what he says.'

"The directors went away and the president with much diffidence approached the cashier on the subject. The cashier flushed up at once and manifested some indignation. He reminded the president that he had served the bank for sixteen years and handled more than $200,000,000 during that time. 'Yes, yes, I know,' said the president apologetically. 'Nobody doubts your honesty for a moment, but you know how queer Mr. Sage is, and it won't trouble you any more to give a fifteen-thousand-dollar bond than to give a bond for five thousand.'

"'That's true,' answered the cashier calmly. 'Now let me illustrate the matter from my standpoint. Here is a package of greenbacks (taking a slender package out of a compartment of the vault near which the president and himself were standing). How much do you think there is in this little package?'

"'I do not know and can not guess,' answered the president.

"'There are $800,000 in good United States currency. Now I will slip this into my trousers pocket (suiting the action to the word), and after buttoning my coat you would not notice any bulging of my pockets. What, therefore, is to prevent my walking out of this bank some afternoon with $800,000, or even $1,000,000? I could be in Canada before you would even suspect that I had stolen anything.'

"'But you are not thinking of doing such a thing, are you?' asked the president with deep concern.

"'No, I am no thief,' said the cashier with dignity, 'but a bond for $15,000 certainly would not stop me if I was dishonest.'

"The president assured the cashier that he appreciated the significance of the illustration. The next day the president described his interview to Mr. Sage and some of the other directors. He suggested that the directors would gain nothing by requiring the cashier to increase the amount of his bond.

"'I don't know about that! I don't know about that!' said Russell Sage in his quick, nervous way, as he stooped to pick up a pin off the carpet; 'money is money nowadays. I think you had better get a good bond for $15,000 from our cashier. Then if he does run away with some of our funds we will have $15,000 instead of $5,000. That is a difference of $10,000, and you know that $19,000 is not to be sneezed at in these days.'"

The three sociable bankers laughed heartily at this story. They all knew Mr. Sage and they could appreciated the point of the narrative. After a brief pause the banker who had told no story said: "I can tell you a true story of a young broker's clerk who, from deliberate honesty, threw away an opportunity to steal $100,000 when he knew he would never be detected. When George I. Seney was speculating heavily in railroad securities he had a large amount of bonds hypothecated with a first-class Wall-street firm. The bonds bore interest-paying coupons, and under the terms of the hypothecation Mr. Seney's clerk was to have access to them every six months for the purpose of clipping the coupons. The clerk was known to the broker's firm. One day when he dropped in to cut off some coupons the hypothecated securities were handed to him, and he was left alone in one compartment of the offices. The firm, of course, retained in its possession a list of all of the hypothecated securities, which it was accustomed to compare with the securities returned by the clerk. On this particular occasion the clerk found infolded in Mr. Seney's package other good negotiable bonds of the value of $100,000. They had evidently got mixed up with Mr. Seney's securities through one of those unexplainable mistakes that happen very rarely in brokers' offices.

"The clerk cut off the coupons that he had come after and restored the package of securities to a representative of the firm. The extra $100,000 of bonds had been slipped into the clerk's coat pocket. Mr. Seney's securities were compared one by one with the check list and found to be all right.

"'Is everything there?' asked the clerk.

"'Oh, yes,' said the broker, as he prepared to put away the box. 'Everything is as straight as a string.'

"'You are sure that there were no other bonds in that box?"

"'Perfectly,' answered the broker with a confident air. 'We never get things mixed here.'

"'Well, how about this $100,000 of bonds?' asked the clerk, drawing the extra securities from his pocket. The broker recognized them instantly and mentioned the name of the person to whom they belonged. His astonishment knew no bounds, when the clerk told him where the bonds had been found. The broker said that he would have sworn in court that those identical bonds were in a certain place in his private safe. The clerk was asked to accept $100 as a souvenir of the occasion, but he declined."

"That fellow will get away with a million yet," said the brisk, natty banker, as he put on his hat and started for the elevator car.

A BLACK JONAH.

Reasons for the Belief that a Boy Was Swallowed by a Catfish.

BURTON, Ala., Sept. 29.—About ten days ago a small negro boy, whose mother lives on the Alabama river, about two miles from this place, was missing. The child was in the habit of playing near the river bank, and, it is supposed, fell into the river and was drowned, and as the mother seemed indifferent about its loss, very little search was made for the body. This morning at an early hour some negroes discovered a very large catfish playing in the river near the landing at this place, and securing some small boats and a seine the monster fish was soon landed on the bank, where it was quickly surrounded by a group of astonished spectators. The fish was carried to the depot and weighed, tipping the beam at 187 pounds. One of our butchers purchased it from the captors, intending to ship it to Montgomery or Selma for sale. On opening the fish the butcher was horrified to find a pair of small shoes, a hat and what appeared to have been a pair of pants and shirt. While an excited group of citizens were discussing the remarkable find, some one suggested that perhaps the fish had swallowed the missing negro boy. The mother was sent for and at once identified the shoes and hat as belonging to her boy that was supposed to have been drowned, and there is no doubt but the fish had swallowed the body and failed to digest the clothing. The missing boy was about 5 years old, but of very small stature for that age, and no one who has seen it doubts the fish's ability to swallow a body of that size.

THE FATAL HALF-HOUR.

Why Ladies Do Not Talk When Left by Themselves After Dinner.

Considering the old question of the silence which reigns among women while sitting by themselves after dinner, and awaiting the advent of the men from the dining room, London Truth says: The secret of the after dinner dullness up stairs lies, to my mind, in the fact that there is nothing for them to do; at most, a cup of tea or coffee is handed around—no wine or cigarettes, no ostensible occupation or recreation, except that dismalest of drawing room episodes, a little music, improvised chiefly as a signal that it is time for the gentlemen to come up stairs. We have not the vivacity of the French or Italians—we have not even the substantial geniality and homeliness of the German "Frau." Our women are affectionate to individuals of their own sex, but scarcely sociable, as a rule, with one another. Still they are not incapable of unbending, and often only require a pretext such as lawn tennis, a garden party or Christmas games; but they do require something, and if they have something to do in the drawing-room—as the gentleme have in the dining-room—that half hour, now so dreaded and so dull, would soon lose its terrors. On the continent the gentlemen leave the table with the ladies. I am not in favor of that; the separation of the sexes is distinctly good. In some English houses the ladies take their coffee down stairs, and only depart when the igarette is lighted, and not always then. But I am not in favor of prolonging the sitting together down stairs. By the time the hostess has caught the eye of the chief lady at the table it usually high time to shuffle the social cards a little, and enable some people to get up and change seats if they please. No, let the ladies leave the men to their wine and tobacco for a space by all means, but, then, let the former be comforted upstairs somehow. There should be some game or divertissements, some center of attraction. something for them to look at or to do.

I have known a single cheery laugh or happy remark break up the frozen silence of a whole company. A pretext is all that is required; but that is just what our ladies after dinner are so often left without. That pretext should never be wanting, and it must be supplied externally, and be capable of striking common chords, like the wine bottle, the walnut or the cigar. Now, what I complain of, and what I think our ladies have at present a right to complain of, is the absence of some such metaphorical wine, walnuts and cigars up stairs—something to loosen the tongue, to provoke the laugh, to excite the repartee, to tickle the fancy, if not to enlighten the mind. That is what the ladies want. the gentlemen have it. I am here, at all events, in favor of equal rights for men and women. The rules and facilities for feeding are the same for both sexes at all dinner parties; let us have a similar respect for the recreation and social refreshment of the sexes after dinner.

Contingencies.

[New York Sun.]

A teacher in a West Virginia freedman's school was giving out some original examples to the class in mathematics, and among them was this:

"If a colored man receive $1 for one day's work, how many dollars will he receive for six day's work?"

One of the boys seemed very stupid over it, and the teacher finally said:

"Moses, how many are six times one?"

"What, does he work all the work?" queried the boy.

"Of course."

"Oh! Why, I was figgerin' dat a circus or a barbecue might come 'long on Saturday!"

A Vast Pile.

The great granite building for the state, war and navy departments is approaching completion. It covers four and a half acres of ground, and will cost about $10,250,000. The only wood about it is in the floors laid over the stone for comfort, and in the doors, which are of mahogany, hung in iron casings.

OUR NATIONAL MALADY.

Is Neurasthenia, or Nervous Debility—It is the Curse of the Nineteenth Century—Hope for the Weak, Nervous and Debilitated Sufferers.

The nervous system in the great hidden central force of the whole animal economy—the sole seat of all organic changes and diseases, as far as personal consciousnes is concerned. Anatomically speaking, the constituents of the nervous system are divided into gray nerve matter and white nerve matter. The latter constitutes cords, the former constitutes the nerve centers or ganglia. Now it is an established fact that diseases invade first of all, the nerve centers—the gray matter—by a deposit of morbid, lifeless matter of the system in these centers of life and energy. The nervous system then, regulates the action of all animal organs. It has the most important office, perhaps, in the work of digestion and assimilation of food, thus controlling the quantity and character of the blood. Diseases of all the organic functions are induced and kept up by debility of the nerves. It will readily be seen, therefore that whatever gives tone and vigor to the nerves builds up the general health.

Let dyspeptics and consumptives bear this important fact in mind, and act according to the dictates of enlightened judgment and experience.

Any derangement of the nerve function causes the supremest misery of life, and generally entails organic disease of the brain or heart. Multitudes suffer pangs of a thousand deaths in the short space of a day, and never dream that their malady (which seems local) is general, and pervades every organ, tissue and cell of the body.

The genito-urinary system is the first to suffer in all cases of nervous debility; they are the first to feel the slightest disturbance of the nervous system; the first to feel the shock; and this sexual impairment is soon followed by heats and colds, by feebleness of memory, more or less general depression. Nerve shock, nerve tire—worry, struggle for existence, operates actively, keenly upon the reproductive organs, giving rise to such conditions as spermatorrhœa, the flowing away of semen in the urine or otherwise; different grades of impotence, even to a want of power of intromissions; irritable prostrate with dribbling of urine, or frequent micturitions; oxaluria, phosphuria, lithæmia, often existing months or years without the knowledge of the individual; but sooner or later other functions will suffer, as digestion, power of mental concentration, irritability of the spinal cord, torpidity of liver or Bright's disease.

Diseases of the brain, cord, great sympathetic, makes the individual sick all over. No one can have any form of nervous disease and be well, and absolute impotence may exist and the individual be to all intents and purposes well.

The explanation is, that the function of generation being the last to develop, is the first to give way, or decay—it has nothing depending on it—it is simply a twig, a branch, not a main trunk like the brain; it is a periodic function, capable of long intervals of inactivity, not of short intervals like the digestive organs, or constantly active like the lungs.

There is a border line of local sexual debility that cannot be passed without suffering to the entire body; so sexual neurasthenia leads to nervous dyspepsia, constipation, liver, kidney and heart disease, and numerous other morbid conditions.

True, in the sensitive, in those of high mental culture, in the highly developed, this border line is speedily reached, as they have little power of resistance, little, much less reserve of vital force than those of a more rugged constitution.

It is time the great importance of the widespread sexual exhaustion, which prevails among and affects civilized man, should be properly appreciated, and the function of the brain, spinal cord and the ganglionic system, as regards healthy procreation, properly understood.

It is not sufficient that we look at the man, healthy and vigorous, and realize that he owes it to normal secretion of the vital fluid, which makes itself evident in the bright eye, the eager expression, the elastic step, the intelligent glance, which stamps its impress on the votary of health; nor are we to take the sunken eye, the pinched and haggard features, careworn, sordid expression of the impotent, loathsome wreck driveling into idiocy.

No, we must penetrate deeper; with a microscope of small power we can study the habits and movements of the spermatozoa, but with high power we can separate them into most minute atoms. In each of these infinitesimal molecules there exists a multitude of active, restless vital germs, enjoying the mysterious process of life, which, guided by inscrutable power, forms a stage in the interminable cycle of eternity, and ultimately, if its surroundings are favorable, develops itself into the likeness of omnipotence.

Man's nervous system is intrinsically the most valuable in animated nature, and the loss of nervo-vital fluid damages, shatters, destroys the superior attributes of mind.

The great question, how to revivify the morbid nervous centers and their filaments, and restore to a healthy and vigorous condition the nervous and debilitated sufferer, has been the source of anxious investigation by the profession; and in the late developments in the science of medicine and chemistry, some of which are surprisingly brilliant, we have discovered the much desired pabulum, which meets the deficiency of nutriment for the nervous function, causing a renewal of life in the entire nervous system.

They are specific remedies acting directly upon the tissues, restoring wasted energies, giving back to the human structure the animated element of life which has been wasted, maintaining that buoyant energy of the brain and muscular system which renders the brain cheerful, brilliant and energetic, entirely overcoming the dull, inactive, sluggish disposition which the debilitated experience. The functions of assimilation are also improved to such a degree that where for years an emaciated, anxious, cadaverous and semi-vital condition has existed, the flesh will rapidly increase in quantity and firmness, the whole system returning to a robust state of health.

In diseases of the blood, brain, heart and nervous systems, as well as the liver, kidney and gravel complaints, rheumatism, paralysis and all other forms of nervous debility, yield to this specific nerve nutriment treatment after all other methods have failed.

There are many physicians claiming to cure "Nervous Debility," Impotency and Nervous Diseases, but they fail in the large majority of cases. I can prove to the satisfaction of those suffering with the above diseases, that the mode of cure practiced by me is unsurpassed by any other method now in use, and is indorsed by all the eminent medical men as well as all advanced thinkers, and is quite beyond the comprehensions of the "Cheap John" pretenders that disgrace the medical profession. In all nervous and chronic diseases of long standing, this method is used with remarkable gratifying results that are permanent. Call or send for pamphlet. Office hours from 9 a. m. to 9. p. m. Sunday, 2 to 4.

A Wonderful Magnetic Cure.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 1, 1885.—I take pleasure in making this statement to the public, that others who may be suffering may avail themselves of the opportunity of quickly being restored to health by the magnetic treatment of Dr. L. C. Goodrich. I had been suffering nearly four weeks with an irritating cough, high fever and severe pain in my lungs and limbs, and had been confined to my bed about one week. While in this condition I sought the aid of Dr. Goodrich, and within ten minutes from the commencement of treatment I was entirely relieved from pain and felt as one transformed into a new being. The next day the doctor called, gave me a light treatment, told me I would need nothing more, as the fever and pain would not return. And I thank heaven that there are those gifted with power to relieve the sick and suffering. MRS. B. BRODT,

SUNDAY: Fair weather and rising temperature.

HOSIERY.—One of the special Bargains for Monday, will be two cases of Ladies' Wool Hose, assorted colors, at 29c per pair. They will probably last one day only. We continue to increase our help in the Hosiery and Underwear departments to wait on the immense number of customers.

JERSEYS.—Children's Jerseys as low as 75c in Navy, Brown and Garnet. Misses' Jerseys, assorted sizes, at $1; the popular colors. Also perfect fitting, new styles in Ladies' Jerseys, for Monday's trade.

WOOL LACES.—We cannot too forcibly impress upon our customers the importance of securing the number of yards they are likely to want in the Angora Wool Laces. The stock is being rapidly depleted, and duplicate orders cannot be filled in New York.

TRIMMINGS.—Chenille Fringes for Wraps and Dresses are exceedingly attractive. The novelties in Wood trimmings are already becoming scarce. Bead Passementeries are making quite a sensation. They are very handsome.

MEN'S FURNISHING DEPT.—On Monday we will sell 3 lots of Half Hose at 25c, 35c and 50 cents per pair, qualities that have never been sold before at these prices.
